Egyptian Cotton Sheets

This long staple variety from Egypt has a fiber length of around 1^{3/8}". The longer the fiber, the more luxurious and durable the grade of cotton will be. Egyptian cotton is known for its luxurious softness. At one time Egyptian cotton sheets were found only in the luxury market, but today they are readily available.

Pima Cotton Sheets

Known for its strength and durability Pima cotton was developed in the southwestern U.S by a careful breeding of Egyptian cottons which fiber length averages 1^{1/2}".

SuPima Cotton Sheets

SuPima is a certification mark used by members of the SuPima Association of America and certifies that the fabric is 100% Southwestern cotton grown by members of the association.

Sateen Sheets

Sateen Sheets have a stitch of four over, one under, placing the most threads on the surface, making it lustrous and smooth, although not as durable as other weaves.

Percale Sheets

Soft, combed fabrics with a close weave. Commonly available in lesser 180 to 200 thread count of either 100% cotton or a cotton/polyester blends with a wrinkle resistance quality.

Pinpoint

This is a stitch of two over and one under. It is very durable but not as soft as other weaves.

Silk Sheets

Silk sheets are one of the most luxurious bed sheets among the various types. It is extremely soft and smooth, providing you with warmth and coolness at the same time regardless of summer or winter.

Bamboo Sheets

Bamboo fibers are very soft, so sheets have a nice silky feel. They are antibacterial and also have the ability to insulate and provide warmth and coolness at the same time regardless of summer or winter. They require special care when washing and drying.

Thread count

The count is the amount of thread used vertically and horizontally to create one square inch of the bed sheet's fabric. "Single ply" sheet sets use one thread for each vertical and horizontal row. Two-ply bedding sheets create a heavier weave with the same number of rows by twisting two threads together.

Standard bed sheets: 200 to 400 thread counts are often soft and airy and are usually made with sateen or twill weave fabric.
 Luxury bed sheets: 500 to 1,000 thread counts are denser, silkier and heavier due to the extra thread.
